Bridge New York

Posted by Dormain at 3/16/2009

From Pulse, we made our way to our last stop, Bridge New York. Our first stop was New York-based Susan Eley Fine Art:

We enjoyed a couple sets of paintings by Japanese artist, Kentaro Hiramatsu (above and below):

Finally, we paused at a set of encaustic pieces by California-based artist Amber George:

I next stopped into New York's Collective Gallery:

I enjoyed digital prints by Gary St. Clare (above) and photography by Frank August (below):

The only San Francisco gallery that I found at Bridge was Toomey Tourell, which was exclusively featuring works by Igor Josifov:

The burned image portraits above are based on photographs taken by the artist over several trips. However, the primary display was a performance piece where the artist had a line tattooed across his scalp (video is below top):

The line signified the separation of the two halves of the brain, which killed a friend of the artist after she suffered a tragic bicycling accident. Portraits of the victim, Renata, wrapped around the booth (above), while an illuminated cast of her face gazed up from the floor (below):
